Take one tender kitten, crush its skull and remove skin, head and little paws. Pat liberally with butter and sprinkle with salt, pepper, garlic and oregano to taste. Cook in hot oven till done. Serve on platter — to unsuspecting roommate!

That's the interesting recipe 18-year-old Aaron Austin reportedly used when, according to roommate Bob Mitchell, he savagely killed a 2-month-old kitten and cooked it in the oven like a pot roast.

The Lowell, Mass., teen pleaded innocent when he was arraigned on a felony charge of unlawfully killing an animal and a companion charge of cruelty to animals.

Austin is also charged with assault and battery for force-feeding Mitchell a piece of his cooked pet!

Mitchell, who owned two Siamese-mix kittens as house pets, said he came home one night to find Austin roasting something in the oven. He said Austin told him they were "having cat for dinner."

"He had something brown in a pot roast pan," Mitchell said. "It was covered with butter, oregano and garlic. I said to myself, 'That's gotta be chicken.'"

Mitchell left the kitchen, but returned a few minutes later. He said Austin had the "roast" on the table.

was hard to tell what it was.

"It was on its back and there were no paws. They were broken off. You could see the bones sticking out of the meat.

"Aaron said it was rabbit and he showed a fork into my open mouth. I was chewing before I knew it. Then I swallowed. That's when I realized what it was.

"I sort of blocked out the taste, but it was very tender. Its way a kitten should be. Its ribs were weren't developed yet."

Mitchell said he later found parts of the dead kitten in the garbage. The next day, he took his other kitten to the Lowell Humane Society for safe keeping.

"When Robert came in with the other kitten, he was asked, as a matter of routine, why he was putting it up for adoption," Society Director Al Davidson told The NEWS.

"His answer was, 'I don't want it to be eaten by my roommate.' At that point, all hell broke loose."

The charges against Austin were filed by the Society.

At his arraignment, Austin said that he had checked himself into a rehabilitation clinic. His case has been delayed to

Silicone shindig

By [redacted] JAMISON

Cops are searching for a woman they say held a "silicone party" in a lady's living room last spring — and gave six flat-chested gals injections to make their breasts bigger!

The woman, [redacted] Ricketts, 42, was practicing medicine without a license, according to police in Silver Springs, Colo., and she broke the law by using the dangerous procedure. One of her patients became deathly ill, cops say.

"A woman got a serious infection and almost died from it," said Lt. [redacted] Reeling of the Colorado Springs Police Department. "The injections have been banned in the United States since the 1970s.

"Apparently Mrs. Ricketts travels around the country doing this.

"A local person makes contacts with women who want the procedure and sets up the 'party' and then calls in the woman to give the injections," he said.

Lt. Reeling said six women paid thousands of dollars each to gather at a private home for the injections last May. At the Tupperware-type get-together they were given a shot of impure industrial-grade silicone directly into their breasts to make them larger.

Similar shots were used in the U.S. decades ago, but doctors found the silicone spread, clumping up after injection, moving to other parts of the body and sometimes causing horrifying infection. Doctors now insert contained bags of silicone under the skin for the same effect.

"The woman who became ill fretted has already had part of one breast through a partial mastectomy," said Lt. Reeling. "We heard about it when her husband called police.

"She had gotten a serious infection across her chest and almost died and he was so upset he wanted us to pursue it. The woman wanted to look better and now she has permanent injuries.

"We just want to warn people so it doesn't happen to anyone else."

Flat-chested gals get risky breast implants at living-room parties!

Blundertaker!

You'd think undertaker Tor Iversen could lay off the booze long enough to give a 72-year-old man a proper burial — but you'd be wrong.

Iversen and his assistant were so wasted they nearly dropped the old man's coffin loading it into the hearse for the trip to the cemetery.

"The hearse was weaving all over the road. He was honking and waving to friends as he passed by having a good old time," said Sonja Svenson, daughter of the dear departed.

"He looked like he was carrying a load of apples instead of my father."

Iversen and his assistant passed out just as the hearse pulled into the cemetery southwest of Oslo, Norway.

"We had to unload the coffin and carry it to the gravesite," said Sonja's husband, Ingvar. "In our moment of grief we had to conduct the service, even to the point of lowering the coffin into the grave."

The grief-stricken family called police after the cemetery service. Iversen and his assistant were charged with public drunkenness.

The Svensons plan to file a damage suit against [redacted]. "We [redacted] together $4,000 to give my father a proper burial

A washout

A cocky college kid tried to con a cop out of a ticket by saying he was going 100 m.p.h. along a highway in blow-dry his just-washed car.

"I've been known to let motorists off if they can give me an outrageous or funny reason for speeding, but I just didn't like this guy's looks," said Officer Nino Fabio.

The young student was forced to park his convertible and accompany officer Fabio to the police station in Naples, Italy. He was charged with speeding and resisting arrest.

TOT KILLED IN CAR CRASH AFTER EERIE PREDICTION

I'm going to be with Jesus

By DICK DONOVAN
Staff writer

Three-year-old Garrett Hayes told his Sunday school teacher, "In two weeks I'm going to be with Jesus" — and 16 days later he was killed in a horrific highway accident!

"He must have known something was going to happen," Sunday school teacher Sharon Wagner told The NEWS. "If we would all just stop and listen to children, we could learn so much.

"I was explaining salvation to my class and I asked, 'Where is Jesus?' And the children would answer, 'In heart.' But Garrett spoke up and said, 'In two weeks, I'm going to be with Jesus.' He said it very firmly.

"Later on, he interrupted the class and said it again. Then at the close of the class, he said it again. He was on his chair up on his knees, and he was very insistent.

"I told Garrett that he would someday be with Jesus, but I didn't think it would be in two weeks. I said, 'Garrett, the only way that can happen is if you die or if The Rapture comes.' [The Rapture is the phrase Fundamentalists use to describe the Second Coming — Editor.]

"But Garrett was very insistent. He said, 'I am! I am! In two weeks I'm going to be with Jesus.' And two weeks and two days later, he was dead. Now he's with Jesus, just like he said he would be."

Garrett, his 28-year-old dad Garrett Jr., his mom Lisa, 34, and five other people were killed in a shattering two-car collision at a rural intersection a few miles from the Hayes' home in Elsie, Mich.

The lone survivor of the crash — the second worst in Michigan history — is Garrett's 5-year-old cousin, Cara Cummings. She was listed in serious condition in a Lansing hospital, but she is expected to recover.

"It's such a terrible tragedy," said Mrs. Wagner, herself the mother of four. "Garrett was such a sweet kid ... a real live wire.

"He said he was going to be with Jesus. I don't know how he knew it, but that's where he is right now ... with Jesus."

MICHIGAN tot Garrett Hayes, 3, predicted his own death.

Young mom's shocking confession:

I lied about being raped

By SUSAN JIMISON
Staff writer

"I lied — I wasn't raped."

That's the shocking confession of young mom Elizabeth Richardson who sent a man she didn't know to jail and destroyed his life by falsely accusing him of sexual assault.

What's more, she admits her horrifying lie ruined her life as well, helping to break up her marriage and even putting her husband at risk when he threatened to kill the man who had raped her.

"What I did was very, very wrong," said Elizabeth, 24, a divorcee, who lives in Overton, Nebr. "I falsely accused Gary Nitsch of sexually assaulting me. In fact, I have never had any personal contact with Mr. Nitsch.

"I heard Gary lost his job and his kids were tormented at school — I guess I just tore his family apart. I want to apologize to Gary, to my family and my husband's family and to everybody I know I hurt."

In a frank interview, the mother of three young children revealed that she had made up her rape lie to get her husband's attention. The former trucker's wife said she was tired of her husband's long absences and knew that he had had several affairs while on the road.

"I just wanted him to be home," the blonde housewife said. "I thought I could get him to be a regular husband. If he was home he wouldn't have no need to have affairs."

One night in September 1988, Elizabeth ripped her nightgown and called a female friend in tears, saying she had been raped. The friend called police, who immediately began to investigate the crime. Days later, Elizabeth picked a man out of a photo lineup and said rape he was her assailant.

The lying wife had picked painter Gary Nitsch, a 44-year-old family man who had once visited her home briefly in connection with a job. Nitsch was arrested and spent three days in jail before Elizabeth told cops she didn't want to pursue the case because it was too stressful for her.

Nitsch was released, but he lost his job over the incident and his family was harassed. Elizabeth's husband tried to gun down Nitsch but the plan went awry when the trigger malfunctioned, Elizabeth said.

"I didn't want my husband to go to jail," she recalled. "So I told him the truth. After that he and I had bad problems. He filed for divorce and told police I had lied about the rape.

"I went to police afterwards and turned myself in. I probably would have told on my own anyway. I had suffered for two years. I couldn't sleep, couldn't face people. It was really bad — I couldn't have lived with it."

Elizabeth was charged with perjury. This summer she was convicted and sentenced to two years probation and 180 days in jail and ordered to buy newspaper and radio ads to publicly apologize she falsely accused Nitsch.

"I don't think anything I'll ever do will be enough. I just wanted everyone to know I'm sorry," Elizabeth said.

But Nitsch, who now has a new job at a local lumber mill, wasn't impressed with Elizabeth's remorse.

"You can't change wrong to right," he said.

'I made the whole thing up — and now I'm sorry,' says Nebraska woman

HUNGRY FOR LOVE housewife Elizabeth Richardson faked the rape story to get her husband's attention.

YOU SHELLFISH BRUTE!

When her fickle boyfriend ditched her for another gal, a vengeful woman got even with the creep — by sewing dead shrimp into the tops of his living room curtains.

Jealous girlfriend gets smelly revenge on her two-timing beau

His home smelled like a garbage dump for months before he figured out where the God-awful smell was coming from.

Jilted women want revenge because they feel anger more intensely and more often than men, said psychologist Kevin Howells of Birmingham University in England.

Take the young woman who was devastated at losing her lover, who was more interested in reconditioning his old Alfa Romeo than in being with her.

One night she tiptoed on all the places where he had carefully parked up the rust spots on the beloved old car.

"I wanted him to experience some of the torture I was going through," she said. "Afterward, I felt utterly satisfied."

Another scorned girlfriend got tired of playing second fiddle in her beau's computer. So she stocked in and cleared all of the computer programs out ing system in chaos when she realized their relationship was over. Another woman shredded her ex-boyfriend's designer clothes.

One revenge-minded wife super-glued all of her hubby's prized possessions when their marriage went on the rocks.

Jilted women don't like direct confrontation, but are more creative at getting revenge, said Howells.

What satisfies them most is a "short, swift kick in their man's lifestyle," he said.

Marijuana eye-opener

We're all pot heads, researchers say — because our bodies contain a natural chemical that's the same as marijuana.

According to recent studies, the natural substance — like pot — has the ability to relieve pain, stop asthma attacks, drive away viruses and put a stop to convulsions. Scientists are hoping they will be able to design new drugs aimed at special parts of the brain that react to marijuana and the naturally-occurring chemical.

"This opens up a whole new system in the body," said

Gal says hormone cure made her a hairy freak!

Housewife Lynn Massy sued her doctor after he treated her for depression and a weak sex drive — and she wound up looking like a hairy gorilla!

The pretty 33-year-old Pascagoula, Miss., woman claimed she grew a mustache, beard and hair all over her body after she took medication from a vial provided by Dr. George John Mitchell. She says the vial had an incorrect label, so she overdosed on the hormone testosterone.

By SUSAN HANSON

"She grew masses amounts of horrible, abnormal, uncomfortable hair," said Neil Harvey, the attorney who handled Lynn's case before the federal court in Mobile, Ala., where Dr. Mitchell practiced. He said because of the label error the client took 13 times the amount of male hormones she should have received while being treated for hormone deficiencies that followed a hysterectomy.

But attorneys for Dr. Mitchell, who died shortly after Lynn filed suit in 1987, argued their client made no error and that the hairy housewife knew just what she was doing when she took overdoses of the drug. They say testosterone revs up a woman's sex drive and that Lynn took too much so she could enjoy its sexy effects.

"She actually took extra doses," said attorney A. Dunbar Fraser Jr., of Mobile. "She took it like she wanted to take it. The hair was getting thicker and thicker. She knew what was happening and she did it to herself."

Although Lynn testified that she stopped taking the hormones but still had to use hair remover [illegible] above her lips, the jury ruled in favor of Dr. Mitchell's estate. Lynn, who now shows no sign of facial hair, received no compensation.

Pretty Florida teen stabbed to death in fight over bumped car

Two hot-tempered women motorists cussed and shoved each other over a minor traffic incident — and then one of them whipped out a knife and stabbed the other to death.

By JACK ALEXANDER

Normally easy-going Amy Shoemaker, 18, was pronounced dead 40 minutes after the knife was plunged through her heart in the lot of a Tampa, Fla., gas station.

Customer John Lively had stopped at the station to get up his car when the two women pulled off Dale Mabry Highway and got out of their cars about 2:45 a.m.

"The victim just kept on yelling at her, 'What's your name? Who are you?'" said Lively.

One woman pulled out a knife as they screamed and cursed at each other. When Miss Shoemaker lunged at the other woman, she was stabbed in the heart.

Courageous customer Albert Green said the knife-wielding assailant nearly ran over him as he reached in her car to grab the keys.

"She put it in reverse and I flew out of the car," said Green, who was barely able to scramble out of the way as the car came toward him.

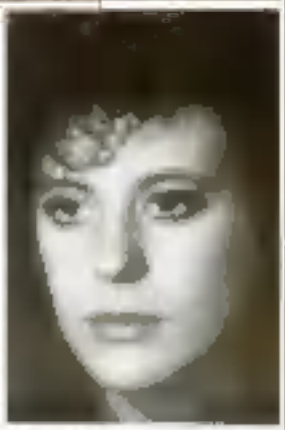
Witnesses got the assailant's license plate number, and deputies later traced it to the home of Maria Guerra, a 24-year-old therapist and part-time student.

Cops charged her with second-degree murder and aggravated assault.

A few minutes before the women pulled into the gas station, witnesses saw the suspect's 1988 Ford bump the victim's Mazda RX-7 from behind several times.

"Miss Guerra was upset because Miss Shoemaker had cut in front of her moments earlier," a sheriff's deputy told The NEWS.

"What's strange about this case is that neither woman had ever been in trouble with the law before. Both had steady jobs and were also going to school to better their lives."



KILLED in a gas station fight: Motorist Amy Shoemaker.

VICTIM HAD CUT IN FRONT OF SUSPECT, SAY COPS

While fishing with a group of White House aides and the Canadian prime minister, President George Bush's son Jeb hooked a big one — his father.

A spokesman admitted Jeb accidentally pierced his dad's right ear lobe with a hook during a fishing trip off the coast of Maine.

The hook was removed by Bush's physician and he later got a tetanus shot.

Gal dumps dream hubby — for being too perfect!

Heidi Schmidt thought she'd found the perfect man when she married Hans, but after two years she's divorcing her "dream husband" because he does the cooking, the cleaning and the shopping — and he's driving her nuts!

"Hans really is the perfect husband," Heidi told the judge in the couple's divorce case in Luebben, East Germany.

"Hans does all of the cooking and the baking. He does the shopping and the dishes. He does the housecleaning and even washes the windows.

"The last straw came when Hans took over the job of taking care of our baby. I really couldn't allow that kind of thing to go on."

Heidi told the judge that when she met and married Hans, a 30-year-old free-lance writer, she thought he was Mr. Wonderful.

"From the very start Hans waited on me hand and foot. I thought that I had married the world's most perfect husband."

Heidi said she believed Hans would stop performing all of the household duties after they had been married for a few months, but her hunting hubby just never let up.

"After a while it drove me mad!" Heidi, 23, testified.

"What was left for me to do? I became so desperate that I begged Hans to leave his dirty clothes in a heap on the floor so I could pick them up.

"But he refused," said Heidi.

Hans testified that he did the housework chores because he was better at them than his wife was.

"She's not only ungrateful, she's jealous," he told the judge.

"I admit that I did all the cooking, but only because I'm a much better cook than she ever will be.

"And if I didn't do the cleaning and the shopping and didn't take care of our little baby girl, it wouldn't have gotten done."

Hairy Hans told Judge Karl Schultz that he became a domestic whirlwind because his mother died when he was 8.

"I never set out to become a perfect husband," Hans testified. "That isn't my goal in life. But when my mother died, the job of taking care of the house and the family fell to me because I was the oldest child."

Hans told the judge it was true that he wanted Heidi to quit her factory job when they got married, but he had expected her to run the household.

"The first meal she cooked for us when we returned from our honeymoon was a disaster," Hans said. "I couldn't believe she called it food!

"We both laughed at that, but after she ruined the second dinner and the third and the fourth, I started doing the cooking."

Judge Schultz granted the couple's divorce and awarded custody of the baby to Hans.

"You may not be the perfect husband," the judge told him. "But I think you'll make a fine mother."

The New Kids on the Block [illegible] rapidly becoming the [illegible] on the [illegible] their violent [illegible]havior from coast-to-coast is turning fans and the [illegible]edia against them.

The Boston Globe took the Kids to task for being "craftily marketed as clean-cut, churchgoing inner-city youths," while they are actually "success-spoiled youths who badly need disciplining."

In the space of a month tours of the Kids have had fisticuffs in Salt Lake City, Atlanta and Boston. The situation is so bad the band's lawyer had to fly to the West Coast to read them the riot act. "Some program is going to be established to change things around as to how they can don't themselves," said New Kids [illegible]manager Lou Levin. A weighty issue for Elvis fans

The "Elvis on Other Planets Weight Chart" is showing up in singles bars all over the country — but it ain't amusing the folks at Graceland. "It's really kind of tasteless," says spokesguy Todd Morgan. "We have a lot more important things to worry about than how much Elvis would weigh on other planets."

The King weighed a whopping 250 pounds on the day he kicked the bucket. On the sun, he would have tipped the Toledo at a staggering 7,140 pounds!

According to the chart, Elvis' Earth weight equals about 12 pounds on Pluto, 97 pounds on Mercury and Mars, 232 pounds on Venus, 43 on the moon, 668 on Jupiter, 778 on Saturn, 832 on Uranus and 208 on Neptune. The weights vary in relation to the planets' various gravity relative to Earth's.

One Elvis-worshiper in Memphis griped: "I see you've very conveniently left off what he's weighing in heaven."

Debra Winger's [redacted] love: Her dog!

High-flying actress Debra Winger is dating Medal of Honor winner Senator Bob Kerrey of Nebraska and was once married to Oscar-winner Timothy Hutton, but the true love of her life was her dog Pete!

"He sort saw at the door, wagging his tail, and two days later, he had another stroke. I knew he'd waited for me. And then I couldn't let go of him. He became paralyzed. I had to catheterize him four times a day." While Pete lay dying, Winger called friends to arrange a cremation.

"I held his head in my lap. I've never seen the light go out of a being before. Of course, he died with his eyes open. He taught me to die real. When I got the ashes in the box, they were still hot." — Vanity Fair.

Ghost crashes wedding!

He poses for pix — but he doesn't show up on film!

A short, fat cigar-making stranger posed in all the pictures taken at a couple's wedding, but when the film was developed — he wasn't in any of the photos.

"He definitely was a ghost. There's no other explanation," said wide-eyed groom Armando Serrecca. "If he was human, how could he disappear from the negatives?"

"When we got the proofs, we couldn't find him on any of them," he said. "We even examined the negatives, but there was no sign of him. Just spaces where he was standing."

Armando and Pamela were married at St. Chad's Church in Romiley, England. Neither they nor other wedding guests will ever forget the squatty, pink-faced stranger.

"We didn't know what he was," said Pamela's mom, Vivian Eccleston. "We thought he was from the groom's side of the family, and they thought he was from our side."

The inebriated, middle-aged stranger looked like a miniature Winston Churchill and smoked a very large and repulsive-looking cigar.

He was beautifully dressed in a gray suit and white shirt with a navy hilo, frilly front and a navy blue bow tie," said Armando.

The smiling, good-natured ghost was in all the family group pictures.

"In some of the pictures he was standing between the bride and my daughter and yet there is no sign of him in the photos — just gaps," said the bride's father, Douglas Eccleston, a policeman for 28 years.

Photographer Ian Freedman remembers the stranger because of his flamboyant dress. "He was always smiling and seemed to be in all the pictures.

"Actually, I had to politely ask him to stand aside when I wanted to shoot the bride and groom together or the immediate family."

In every picture the stranger was in, the background shows up perfectly — as if there was

"I've been a professional photographer for 32 years and I've taken thousands of wedding pictures," said Freedman. "Nothing like this has ever happened before."

Lotteries are scams for lazy folks!

I'm madder than a surgeon with a leak in his yacht over all those states rigging folks off with stupid lottery scams.

MY AMERICA
By ED ANGER

My lazy brother-in-law who lives in Florida called me several weeks ago to see if I wanted to buy some tickets for that $100 million lottery racket they were running down there.

And not only that, the no-account bum called me collect.

I slammed the phone down so hard I'll bet he couldn't hear for a week. Let's face it. Lotteries are exactly for fools like him who don't want to work for a living. How would YOU like to tell your next door neighbor that the only way you got a big house, fancy car and swimming pool was because some numbers were picked up on Ping-Pong balls? If somebody sent me a winning lottery ticket for a million bucks, I'd toss the sucker up in a hundred little pieces, by jiminy!

Boy, don't you think I'd like to go to Reno with a blank check and refurnish my house. Damn right. And I'd love to have an 18-hole miniature golf course in my backyard, too. But out of I have to humiliate myself by having my picture taken beside some oversized lottery check like they do to the winners. I've never won anything in my life and I don't intend to start now. So if my pinhead brother-in-law wants to waste money playing a lottery, great.

I make my money the old-fashioned way — I earn it!

Psychic warns woman:

You'll watch someone die!

By JACK ALEXANDER
staff writer

"You are going to see a [illegible] ride," a psychic told shocked Susan Schofield — and 10 minutes later she saw a man jump 200 feet to his death.

And 10 minutes later — she did!

"There is a man and there is a car involved," clairvoyant Roy Rama told her. And he was right.

As Susan, 33, and two friends drove across a bridge in Chatterton, England, after visiting Rama, they saw a car stop on the span.

"The headlights stayed on as a man got out and I saw him climb over the rail," said Susan. "I shouted, 'He's going to jump!' Then, as we watched, I saw him disappear over the edge."

Susan reported it to police when she got home. A half hour later, cops called back and said they'd found the body of William Rainford. Mr. Rama said later he had kept Susan longer than normal because something seemed to tell him to. "I feel it was the exact time that the man was in his car contemplating suicide," he said.

Rama feels that Susan will be upset for a time, "but she will get over it." Susan says she wants to go back to Rama for another reading.

Expert tells how to buy a used car

Are you in the market for a good used car? Do you know what to look for so you won't wind up buying a worn-out heap of junk?

In his book Cheap Wheels, car expert Jim Bennett gives some advice on how you can tell if a used car is worth a second look. Here are a few of his pointers:

● The interior should show no age — or wear. In fact, if the odometer shows 37,000 miles, the car should look like it was used that long.

● The engine should be clean and full. Dirt or leak oil reveals an uncaring owner. Freshly painted engines may indicate a leak in the cooling system.

● The radiator should be clean. Yellow-brown or bright fluorescent orange are good colors. Muddy brown indicates rust in the system which could require a simple flush — or an expensive repair.

● The carburetor should be relatively clean and free of rubber or dirt.

● Measure the tread on all tires for uneven wear. It could disclose a troublesome suspension problem.

● Check the shocks. Push down hard on all four corners. The car should recover quickly without bouncing.

Take notes while looking at a used car.

Then, when you have a likely candidate, invest $50 and have a trained mechanic take a look at it. Your notes will be his basis for his

Mothers' club snubs Mr. Mom

FULL TIME parent Joel Chaiken was given the cold shoulder by a neighborhood mothers' group. The devoted dad takes care of his 2-year-old son Benjamin while his wife works. "They can't exclude me," said the proud Mr. Mom. "There are laws that give us rights."

. . . and now he is suing them for sex discrimination!

By SUSAN DINGLER

Miffed "Mr. Mom" Joel Chaiken wanted to join his neighborhood mothers' group, but they turned him down — and now he's suing them for sex discrimination.

The full-time homemaker and father says it isn't fair that he should be excluded from the mothers' support group just because he's a dad.

He has brought a complaint before the New York State Division of Human Rights claiming his civil rights have been violated.

"They told me it was inappropriate for a man to join the group because some of the topics they discuss are gender-based," Chaiken, 31, told The NEWS.

"They thought women in the group wouldn't be comfortable with a man there.

"But I think it's illegal for them to exclude me. My point is that there are laws that give us rights. They can't exclude me."

Chaiken, whose wife works as a lawyer while he tends to their 2-year-old son Benjamin, says as a full-time domestic engineer he needs contact with other folks who stay home with the kids.

And Chaiken believes he'd have a lot to offer to the women who shared his mothers' group. His social workers at the Riverdale Neighborhood House on the Bronx, N.Y., where he first talked of the idea of letting a guy join. The gals got talks about rewarding child care, getting the baby to sleep and selecting pediatricians.

"I think just being in the group would change the group for the better," says Chaiken, a college professor who quit his $32,000 a year job to raise his son.

We would get insights that might lead to better husband-wife relations at home. And I could share that some men can be supportive and compassionate as women — even on subjects like breast feeding."

So convinced is Chaiken that he gains as all the world's sex bias, party that he has taken the dispute to higher authorities. Last month the New York State Division of Human Rights decided there was reason to believe that Chaiken had been discriminated against, and now the dispute is headed to court to win his point.

At groups like these you get valuable information — it's the way you really find out things," Chaiken said.

"It gets me angry. They don't allow men in and I am going to take this all the way through the courts if I have to."

TEN guests at the wedding of Steve and Benita Gable were injured when a pickup plowed into the reception hall.

Runaway truck smashes into wedding reception!

Newlyweds Steve and Benita Gable didn't get a chance to cut their wedding cake — it got smashed to bite-sized bits when a runaway pickup truck plowed into their reception hall!

"I saw people go flying all over the place," declared Charles McCarthy III, who was a passenger in the truck when it ran amok in Imperial, Pa.

The truck was driven by cousin-of-the-bride Jay Kanish, who had left the reception with McCarthy to get some cigarettes.

The truck belonged to another guest at the reception and Kanish was just getting some cigarettes that were in it," a spokesman for the North Fayette Police Department said. "He decided to move the truck, but apparently didn't know how the stick shift worked. Any way, the truck lurched forward, went over the curb and down a 30-foot embankment and tore through the wall of the reception hall."

Witnesses said the runaway truck crushed the ramp, slammed into the band stage and sent the wedding cake bursting through the air to splatter against a wall.

In all, 10 people, including two children and the bride's father, suffered minor injuries.

DIRTY DOC MADE PORNO FILMS OF PATIENTS, SAY COPS

A small town doctor who was looked up to as a pillar of the community is now accused of committing the most disgusting crimes imaginable — making porno films of innocent schoolgirl patients!

Dr. Joseph Cichon, a 56-year-old father of three, who for nine years was a prominent physician in Streator, Ill., was indicted on 60 counts of sexually assaulting and videotaping 13 girls in his office. He is charged with 15 counts of aggravated criminal sexual assault, 15 counts of criminal sexual assault, 14 counts of child pornography, 10 counts of aggravated criminal sexual abuse and one count of videotaping a public restroom.

He is free on a $1 million bond.

Cops began investigating Dr. Cichon last year, after a mother questioned the treatment he gave her young daughter for a urinary infection.

The mother told Dr. Cichon that her daughter had been a victim of robbery and sexual assault, a type of trauma that didn't require medication.

During the course of the treatment, Dr. Cichon massaged the young girl's legs and buttocks with lotion.

The mother's report states Dr. Cichon later told the girl "the pictures he took turned out really good and that she didn't have to worry because he didn't get her pretty face in any of them."

Dr. Cichon was arrested and cops seized two videotapes.

I'm a hot tomato but he's a couch potato

Dear Dotti: I've been living with my boyfriend for two years now and I'm convinced that people who've been married 50 years have more action in the bedroom than we do.

When I ask my guy why he's not interested in sex he just shrugs. He's only 25 years old. Is mine a sexual normal? — Wondering in Georgia

Dear Wondering: No, it's not normal. The fact is, your boyfriend's a dud!

My new neighbor is Elvis himself!

Dear Dotti: I can't believe it. I recently moved into a small town and noticed that my next-door neighbor was always singing Elvis songs. One day he came over to my house to borrow a cassette tape and it was Elvis in the flesh! Should I tell someone or keep my mouth shut? — Confused in Cloudy Bluff

Dear Confused: If you live next door to The King, I'd say say just. And if you must tell somebody about your little fun, keep it a secret!

Cheap parents won't raise my allowance

Dear Dotti: I hate my part-time because they're so cheap. I started eighth grade this year and they're only giving me $45 a week allowance to buy lunches at school and get records and magazines and other things I need. I told them I needed more but they said there I needed more but they said no. Please help me, Dotti. Tell my parents that an eighth grader can't live like this. — Cheated in Tulsa

Dear Cheated: You have to ask, you little pauper, and you have to be good. With such a snotty attitude you're lucky to be getting ANYTHING from your parents. If I were them I'd take away your allowance.

Confidential

Dear Beauty in Stone Creek: Lots of ugly women find husbands. It's too bad you're not one of them, though.

Dear Stressed in Eagan: If you're such a great cleaner, why do you have to make your clothes tell to get people to watch?

Dear Adventurous in Wayside: I can think of a lot of things to do with a good car and that ain't one of them.

Dear Neighbor in Alton: I seriously doubt that was a HEMORRHOID cure on your husband's pants leg.

Dear Puzzled in Verona: I don't care what your mother said. A banana by any other name CAN'T give birth to a rainmaker!

I got an 'A' for my Dotti essay

Dear Dotti: One of my friends was at school asked us to write an essay titled "What I Look Up To and Why."

I chose you, Dotti. And guess how I got it back? I got an A on my paper after saying that I look up to you because you're a great, hardworking woman who's independent and doesn't care what other people think. When giving advice you tell it like it is. And you're beautiful, too. — Student in Ohio

Dear Student: Kids take your reviews very seriously. Thanks for a lovely letter — and keep up the good work!

A stranger pinched me in the fanny

Dear Dotti: What would you do if a strange man walked up behind you in a department store and pinched your butt? That happened to me recently and I was too embarrassed to say anything at first but then I got mad. Now I'm thinking I should have done something. — Undecided in Pittsburgh

Dear Undecided: If some stranger pinched me on the butt, I'd punch him with a right cross. Then I'd call the police and charge him with assault!

What should I name my puppy?

Dear Dotti: I just got a mongrel puppy that's half husky and half something else. It's solid black and has a white belly. It's also a male. I respect your opinions and ideas, Dotti. Will you help me name my puppy? — Shelly in Winchester

Dear Shelly: If I were as clever as you, I'd call the pup "Stumpy." It's not very original, but at least you'll have an easy chance of remembering it!

Dotti will answer your letters — and not in like it is. Just write to her, c/o Weekly World News, 600 South East Coast Ave., Lantana, Fla. 33462

Dear Countess: Many years ago I lost touch with a dear friend. I want to find her but I lost her address and phone number and can't get in touch no matter how hard I try.

A private investigator said he could find her but his fee is too high for me to pay. Please help, Countess. — Waiting in South Dakota

Dear Waiting: I didn't even have to use my psychic powers to help you because I received a letter from your friend the same day I got this one from you! She wants to get in touch with you also. I've forwarded your mailing address to her and hers to you. I foresee a happy reunion in December.

Dear Countess: My boyfriend has a problem with his left testicle. It's been swollen for a month and now he's complaining that it's painful. He refuses to see a doctor. What should I do? — Worried in Texas

Dear Worried: Tell your boyfriend that if he doesn't see a doctor soon, he'll be singing soprano! The left testicle is sensitive to cancer, so he should see a doctor right away. You've mentioned that your boyfriend is a handsome hunk but every shy guy who seems to be interested in me has. It'd love to go out with him but he's too shy to ask me for a date and I'm not too keen on asking myself.

Could you please tell me if I'd be wasting my time to take a chance on this man? — Lonely in Michigan

Dear Lonely: You definitely should call this man up! A beautiful relationship is just waiting to blossom!

Dear Countess: I kept house for an elderly man until he passed away in May leaving me all his money and possessions. Now his long-lost son has popped up with a lawyer in tow. He says he wants to share his father's estate with me. I'm willing to do that but I'm afraid he's out to get everything. What should I do? — Worried in Florida

Dear Worried: Legal squabbles like this are often long and drawn-out and yours will be no exception. Don't worry, though. You will triumph in the end.

As reported in the September 18 edition of The NEWS, the coded cry for help is believed to have come from a starship that was crippled on the outer fringe of the Milky Way galaxy 25,000 years ago.

"It took that long for the radio message to reach us traveling at the speed of light," astrophysicist Frank-Herbert Shaner told reporters in [redacted]. Yesterday.

Drunk nails himself to park bench

By JOE SINGER

Plastered plumber Phillip Pyne decided to sleep it off on a park bench, but he was afraid he'd fall off — so pickled Phil nailed himself to the bench!

Shocked officers found him sprawled on the wooden bench with three six-inch nails through each of his thighs.

"He'd been bleeding, but he was so drunk he apparently didn't feel a bit of pain," said flabbergasted patrolman Peter Keyes.

Investigators said pie-eyed Phil, 51, had been boozing it up with pals in a seaside pub when he decided to cuddle at home. But on the way, the sleepy-headed reveler spotted the bench and stopped for a snooze.

. . . so he won't fall off as he snoozes!

"He says he had a hammer and nails in his coat, so he took them out and nailed himself to the bench so he wouldn't roll off while he was sleeping and get hurt," Patrolman Keyes told reporters in Weymouth, England.

"When we got there, he picked up the claw hammer and was going to yank the nails out himself. We stopped him. Granted, he'd done enough damage to his legs already."

Instead, firemen gave the bench from the pavement and placed it in an ambulance with the drunk-drunk father of three still attached.

At the hospital, dumbfounded docs discovered Phil had tented mangling the bones in his legs by just a fraction of an inch. They said he's recovering nicely. "He is an extremely lucky man," said a hospital spokesman.

"He had a big, silly grin on his face, and he kept telling us everything was just fine. Really he seemed happy as a lark the whole time."

Hard-luck 4-year-old's prayer is answered!

God brought my dog back home!

By Bert Donovan
Staff writer

"Please, Jesus, tell my uncle Eric to make those bad guys bring my dog back to me."

That was the heart-tugging bedtime prayer from Zachary Smith, a hard-luck 4-year-old who lost his home, his only toy, his uncle and his dog — but never lost hope.

"After his dog Spike was stolen we all thought he would never see him again," Zachary's grandma, Sharon Jones, said from her home in Des Moines, Iowa. "We were prepared to tell him that Spike was with someone who must have needed him more.

"But Zachary never gave up thinking that he'd get Spike back. He never lost faith . . . and now they're back together again."

All that faith was a lot more than anyone had a right to expect from a youngster who had already suffered so much heartbreak.

In January 1988, when Zachary was 2, the family home and just about everything they owned was destroyed by fire. The boy managed to salvage one toy, a truck, but that was stolen four months later.

A couple of months later, the boy's mom and dad split, and Zachary began to rely on his young uncle Eric to fill the role of father-figure in his life.

"Eric always called Zachary his little buddy," Grandma Jones said.

Then the hard-luck kid was dealt another crushing blow last March when his beloved uncle Eric was killed in a highway accident.

"That really threw Zachary for a loop," his grandma said. "He went to the funeral home with us and gave Eric a good-bye hug. We were trying to teach him to cope with death."

Just before the funeral, Zachary was given a 6-week-old springer spaniel puppy that had been born on Eric's 22nd birthday.

In the weeks that followed, boy and dog became inseparable.

He lost his home, his toy, his uncle and his dog — but he never lost hope

But a few weeks ago, some dirty trash stole Spike from his outside chain. The boy of his dog but the boy like a bee. of bricks.

Spike was gone for only a few days when, like a miracle, a neighbor called to say he had found Spike sitting outside his house. Someone the little guy had managed to escape his captors.

And as Zachary and Spike are back together again, Mrs. Jones and mom Gina thank God it would happen. But Zachary never had any doubts.

He knew Jesus and uncle Eric wouldn't let him down.

EVERYTHING'S OK now for little Zachary now that his dog is back. Spike gives his little master a kiss.

THE FAMILY'S together again now that Spike is back. Zachary, Grandma Sharon Jones and mom Gina.

Ostrich kills pinhead poacher

A pet trained ostrich that was fed by a crazed ostrich when he tried to swipe one of the bird's eggs.

Gerald Wagner had traveled from France in Cameroon for the adventure, but his thrill-seeking days ended when the 300-pound mother bird chased him down and pecked him to death.

I told him to leave the ostrich eggs alone," Zamaro Lawrence, a tour guide, said.

"I would rather kiss the nose of a tiger than anger an ostrich."

The bird attack was more than 200 yards from the ostrich when it started chasing him.

He had no chance to outrun the bird," Lawrence said.

After the ostrich caught Wagner it knocked him to the ground and went to work with its powerful beak.

"It was a terrible sight. But Wagner was warned many times," Lawrence said.

"A man who messes with an ostrich is a man who dances with death."

With a gun to her head, she keeps her sunny side up!

Granny cooks breakfast for crook

A gutsy granny not only refused to let a young punk rob her, but she made him sit down while she fixed him breakfast — then talked him into surrendering to cops.

cross a two-hour ordeal began just after dawn as Hilda Zoller, 94-year-old widow, [illegible] shortened and dried her hair.

"I walked into my living room and there was this young rascal standing by the door with a gun in his hand. He said he wanted my money and jewelry," Hilda told the newspaper, Frankfurter News Press in Frankfurt, Germany.

The spunky grandma said she brushed by the gunman and walked into her kitchen to cook breakfast.

"Didn't you hear what I said, old scratch," the crook shouted. "Give me your money and jewelry or I'll kill you."

Hilda, who is barely 5-feet tall, whirled around and hoisted the young robber upside in the face.

"Don't you dare tell me what to do in my own house," she said. "And put that stupid gun down. You're not going to shoot anybody."

The young thug pushed her against the oven and grabbed the gun in her hand. "You've got 15 seconds to do what I say or you're dead," he snapped.

"Look, sonny," said the feisty elderly. "I'm 94 years old. My husband is dead. I've got arthritis and I've lived a full life. Dying ain't something I worry about.

"So why don't you sit down in that chair and relax or get out of my house."

The young bandit slumped down in a kitchen chair, totally frustrated. "How do you like your eggs?" asked Hilda.

The stubborn old woman made her gun-toting guest eat eggs, sausage and biscuits. And he drank almost a quart of milk.

"I told him if he'd quit and give up to the police, I'd help him get a job and put in a good word to the judge."

The gunman, who identified himself as Fritz Koch, 18, agreed and Hilda called the cops.

Because it was Fritz's first robbery attempt, a judge put him on probation. Hilda got him a job on a neighbor's farm and rented him a room in her house.

Little girl's body found in car wreckage — after it was towed to the junkyard!

By JACK ALEXANDER

Cops didn't realize a little girl's body was still in the wreckage of her daddy's car until five hours after it was towed from an accident scene to a junkyard.

Veronica Cavarrubias, 11, had been riding in the back seat of her father's Toyota pickup when it was rammed from behind by another car near Fairfax, Va.

Her parents, two sisters and brother were taken to a hospital and a wrecker towed the damaged Toyota to a storage lot.

Later, when relatives of the injured family arrived at the hospital, they asked police if there were any fatalities — Veronica.

"We were saying, 'Impossible,'" said Trooper James Brinkley Jr., who had returned to the crash scene.

Thinking Veronica may have been thrown from the car, cops searched the area thoroughly but couldn't find her.

Police and tow-truck workers then went to the auto storage compound and discovered Veronica's body completely covered with twisted metal.

"The metal had just rolled up over the child," said Trooper Brinkley. "The rear trunk came up on the front seat. That's how bad it was." Cops had counted only three children.

But Veronica was asleep at the time of the accident.

"A little doll baby was found near her body," said Trooper Brinkley.

An autopsy indicated that the girl died on impact. "I doubt if she ever knew what hit her," said the trooper.

The dead girl's parents, Jose and Miriam Cavarrubias, were listed in serious condition. Her year-old brother, Paul, and sister Rachel, 13, were in critical and fair condition, respectively. Another sister, Debbie, 8, was treated and released.

China jails farmer & throws key away for eating rare bear!

By MICKEY McGUIRE
Christopher Island

Farmer Leng Zhidong will slave away his life on a chain gang because he committed "the most unforgivable crime" when he killed and ate Han-Han — China's most prized giant panda!

The vicious 39-year-old father of three set more than 20 wire traps throughout a protected giant panda research center in the Wolong Reserve in the Chinese province of Sichuan.

The gentle Han-Han — which means "foolish" — was snared in one of the beastly traps and held prisoner until Leng found her.

The brutal killer strangled the helpless female, then skinned and dismembered her and took the bulk-boned meat home to eat.

"To the people of China, there can be no greater sin than to harm even a hair on these magnificent creatures," Wolong Reserve official Chung-an Wang said. "The giant panda is among the rarest creatures on Earth and can only be found in China.

"What this murderous fiend did to our beloved Han-Han is unspeakable. Not only was killing her was certainly bad enough. But then to chop her up like dog meat is more than my mind can comprehend."

Han-Han was by far the most treasured of the half dozen giant pandas that roam free in the vast Wolong Reserve. She had been fitted with a transmitter that monitored her movements in the wild.

When Han-Han's monitor showed no movement for almost a week, the researchers tracked it down.

They had hoped to find that she was mating with a male — then they came upon the grisly remains of her slaughtered carcass. A trail of dried blood led them to Leng's forest hut.

"Our beautiful Han-Han has gone to her ancestors," said Wang. "Another ray of light from the sun is gone from our lives.

"There is no punishment that is cruel enough for Leng Zhidong.

"He has brought dishonor to his village and to his family. He has earned only the contempt of his fellow Chinese."

Leng's wife and children have disowned him.

Under Chinese law, because it is believed that there are only about 1,000 of them still surviving in the wild and only in China.

Jewelry store manager says her stickup attempt was just a drill

— but cops bust her anyway!

A masked woman tried to rob a jewelry store she managed, but when employees saw through her disguise — she told them it was just a test . . . a security drill, cops said.

"She was dead serious about robbing the place until they recognized her. Then she tried to say she was only testing it was a big joke," said an Ocala, Fla., police detective.

Joyce Compton, 36, was charged with aggravated assault, attempted armed robbery and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony.

Police said Joyce walked into Gano and Son Jewelers — where she was assistant manager — armed with a 38-caliber pistol, with a silk stocking over her face and wearing a wig and baseball cap.

She locked the front door and was herding the workers into a back room when one of them recognized her.

Once she was unmasked, Joyce acted like the robbery attempt was "a drill," according to police.

She might have pulled off the incredible hoax, cops said, if they hadn't been tipped off about more than $500,000 in jewelry she had ordered for the store without her bosses' knowledge.

The tipster had overheard Joyce talking about the ordered jewelry at an out-of-town social gathering. When the tipster later heard about the attempted robbery, she called cops.

More than $100,000 of the jewelry was found in a small box hidden in the store, said Police Capt. Vance Ferguson. Another $400,000 in jewelry was found in Joyce's house, police said.

"If the employees hadn't recognized her, we believe Miss Compton would have locked their employees in a back room and stolen the $500,000 worth of jewelry," said a cop.

THE SCHOOL OF PARALEGAL STUDIES

World-famous author's seven-year study proves . . .

Your astrological sign reveals how long you'll live!

By DICK DONOVAN

The astrological sign that you were born under can tell you how long you can expect to live!

That staggering discovery was made by acclaimed author-astrologer Forrest Fickling during a painstaking seven-year study of the birth and death records of more than 60,000 people.

"I was stunned by my findings," said Fickling from his cliffside home in Laguna Beach, Calif.

"But there can be no disputing the facts — people born under some signs, on the average, live far longer than those born under other signs.

"For example, I found that men born under the zodiac sign of Taurus and women born under the sign of Gemini are the undisputed winners in the survival race. Both have an average life span of 81 years, 6 months."

According to Fickling's research, the life span leaders are closely followed by Capricorn women, who can count on living for 80 years, while women born under the sign of Taurus will be around for 79.6 years.

Next in line are Aries men, who should live for 78 years, and Aries females with an average life span of 78 years.

"At the very bottom are the Sagittarians — of both sexes," Fickling said. "And that's probably because they take more chances in life.

"My study shows the Sagittarian female has an average life span of just 63.6 years, while the Sagittarian male lives only 62 years."

Fickling's study shows that Gemini and Virgo have the widest gaps between the sexes with Gemini women and Virgo men living 13.6 years longer than their gentler counterparts.

Gloria Fickling (an Aries) was amazed at her astonishing study by her wife. Ghost (a Virgo) and a crack team of highly trained researchers and statisticians.

"We collected birth and death dates for more than 60,000 people and insisted that our researchers obtain an equal number of birth dates from every sign of the zodiac," he explained.

"The team used a variety of sources for supplying me with dates — collecting them from library reference books, municipalities and even graveyards," said Fickling.

"I was amazed to see a pattern clearly emerging after I'd examined only 5,000 birth and death dates.

"That is when I became really excited — seeing significant differences show up in life spans.

"I hadn't expected anything so dramatic.

"The pattern became even more stable as we approached 10,000 dates, and after 20,000 dates the pattern became as solid as a rock.

"We continued to work beyond 60,000 dates to give clear support to an already established set of conclusions," said Fickling.

Fickling, who with his wife co-wrote the Jimmy West detective books which became a hit television series of the mid-'60s, outlined how he arrived at the average astrological life spans.

"We determined the age at death for each person, and then we listed the age under the relevant zodiac sign, either the male or the female category.

"Then we added up the ages in each category and divided the total by the number of persons we'd listed in the category.

"This gave us the average age at death for the specific category.

"Our computations were studied dozens of times to ensure our accuracy."

John Addey, editor of the prestigious Astrological Journal of Great Britain and Canada, hailed Fickling's incredible findings as "stunning in their accuracy."

Now you can use the zodiac life span chart especially prepared for The NEWS to find out how you measure up in the survival race.

'It was the only way to keep him from bugging us'

Couple locks fast-talking salesman up for 26 days

FREED Tahnoun Phillips Aalim

Pot-up Francis Tahnan and his weary wife Alaina got so sick of being hounded by a pushy insurance salesman that they lassoed the creep — and held him captive in their attic for nearly a month!

By LAUREL HOWIE

The intended Tahnans refused to release their pushy persistent until he and his boss swore in writing that he'd never come knocking at their door again.

"We were put at the end of our rope," frowns Francis, 49, later told a judge. "We never wanted to hurt anybody, but this only seemed sensible."

The drama of an crazy we talked about serving you to get him off our backs."

The timid TV repairman and his wife eventually pleaded guilty of kidnapping, but a sympathetic judge placed them on probation. "We all know how interesting these salesmen can be," said Judge Jean Lucas.

The Tahnans' tale of woe began late last year when fast-talking Phillips Aalim pounded on their door outside Paris, France, to peddle life insurance.

"He seemed nice enough at first so we let him in, and that was an awful mistake," Alaina recalled.

"When we told him we had plenty of life insurance, he looked out all these other things he was selling — car insurance, fire insurance, home insurance, health insurance. He had them all.

"It was after midnight before we finally shoved him out the door."

And the never-say-die salesman kept coming back — increasing the frightened couple 17 times in the next 10 days.

"Finally one morning in total exasperation I threw a rope around the little pipsqueak and locked him away in the attic," said frustrated Francis.

For the next 26 days, harried Phillips remained a prisoner of his own philanthropy.

"For the first time in a month, we could actually relax in our own home," said Alaina.

Eventually, Francis phoned Phillips's boss and promised to let the mad-sack salesman go if they both signed a statement promising that Phillips would never return.

"They promised, so we turned the little worm loose," Alaina recalled. "We knew they'd call the police on us — but we knew any judge who ever dealt with a door-to-door salesman would take pity on us."

Hitchhiking ghost scolds lead-foot motorists!

By REBECCA WALKING

Dozens of motorists have been frightened and infuriated by a hitchhiking ghost who scolds them about their driving habits and then vanishes into thin air!

Czechoslovakia's Komsomol Newspaper said the unfortunate apparition was first seen thumbing along a rural highway near Brno in March.

The chastising spirit has since hurled rules and admonishments at motorists, said the newspaper.

And in each instance he reportedly rushed up and cried about their reckless driving before he said, "I'm getting out of here," and disappeared.

"I knew a couple might had had liquor to the driving at the last minute but said the next minute he was gone," said Josef Slavik, a factory engineer from Brno.

"I just couldn't decide if I remember I had gone crazy or really had seen a ghost. The one thing I did know was that I was going to stop where he vanished.

"There is no way on earth a man could have gotten out of that car without the moving help do it."

Marsus reported the sightings to Brno Police but Officer Karel Vasik, who had already heard the bizarre story dismissed the report before it was even filed.

But Brno and officials were astonished the next that the ghost allegedly thumbs no but haven't seen anyone at any drivers said he eventually the same thing," said the cop.

"They said they picked up a young male hitchhiker just at the start.

"There is these cars he was pleased that they were driving the car and asked several of them if he could use their a cigar.

"He didn't stay more than a minute or two in each car. The people who picked him up said he told them to relaxed but his and was getting out just before he disappeared.

But Brno and officials were astonished the next that the ghost allegedly thumbs no but haven't seen anyone at any thing that matches his description.

"Don't ask me what's happening out there because I really don't know," he said. "A lot of people say they have seen a ghost out there and you can believe them if you want to. I just fill out the reports."

Pygmy shortage

Pygmies will be extinct soon, experts fear, because the little Africans are refusing modern medical care.

There are reports about 100 of the tiny Ugandans, who roam the jungle and refuse to join the modern world.

"If they continue refusing medical treatment and immunization they will be wiped out within two years," said a government doctor. Kampala Reporter.

MAN SUES HIMSELF & WINS $122,500!

By SUSAN JAMISON
Staff writer

Company owner Peter Maxwell was injured on the job, so he hired a lawyer — and sued himself!

Then, as head of the manufacturing firm where he worked, Maxwell paid himself a whopping $122,500 in compensation for his injuries and successfully battled the IRS in court so he didn't have to pay any taxes on the income.

"The court said I did nothing wrong," said Maxwell, 55, of Chino, Calif.

"I needed the compensation for my pain and distress and I got it."

The bizarre law case arose after Maxwell was injured in 1977. A repairman with his wife at Life Products Inc. of Chino, Maxwell was then employed of the firm and paid himself a $10,000 a year salary.

One day he got his sweater caught on the protruding bolt of a machine used to mix urethane for manufacturing foam padding. The father of two was pulled into the mixer and sustained severe injuries.

"My hand went into the rotating shaft and the machine pulled my arm in and broke it," Maxwell said. "I had a couple of operations, they put a metal plate in my arm and I've suffered permanent loss of movement.

"I decided to seek restitution from the company.

"It was a separate corporation and I was an employee. I had been injured on the job and couldn't get workmen's comp so I went to a liability attorney and sued them."

Maxwell's lawyer contacted Life Products and announced his client's intention to sue.

As the owner of the company, Maxwell then hired another lawyer to defend his firm.

The two lawyers negotiated and agreed to a settlement — and Maxwell walked away $122,500 richer. Every penny earned from the suit was declared as income on his personal tax return.

...and the greedy IRS can't tax a penny of it, says California judge

Using common law until the IRS got wind of Maxwell's bizarre legal shenanigans.

Government tax agents launched an investigation.

They say that the businessman to court for claiming the compensation on his company's books as a business expense and for failing to pay income taxes on the $122,500 award.

Last month a federal judge ruled in Maxwell's favor and sent the IRS packing, saying that Maxwell had done nothing illegal.

"Taxpayers have the right to decrease taxes or avoid them altogether by means which the law permits," said Judge Robert Throw in his decision.

After she calls her ex-hubby a 'moron' . . .

Gossipy divorcée told: 'Shut up — or go to jail'

Socialite Lynn Perseff told friends her ex-husband was a "moron" during a gala black-tie affair — and almost wound up in the slammer!

The Boca Raton, Fla., woman had been ordered by a divorce court judge to keep her sharp tongue under control two years before when she won her divorce.

"I don't like putting people in jail, but I have to propose you that if that's what I need to do to stop this, that's what I'll do," said Judge Walter Colbath at 1988.

He ordered Mrs. Perseff and her ex-husband Myron to stop spreading gossip about each other after a particularly vicious divorce battle. To stay out of jail they had to follow his orders.

"Nor offering was made solitary libelous, slanderous or any other derogatory remark toward the other to any one in the entire world at any time, either orally, in writing, by body language or any other form of communication."

But, according to court testimony, Mrs. Perseff got her first in her mouth. At a holiday party after a room memory for a local theater she ate much of lamb, danced to a 13-piece orchestra — and had mentioned Dr. Myron Perseff a half-dozen plastic surgeon.

"She was quite loud and appeared intoxicated," said one witness, Patricia Estep, in a court document.

"I overheard her talking to other people that her ex-husband Myron used to master that he had so many outstanding lawsuits against him that she left him while he still had something to split up.

"I heard her call him a moron."

It turned out Mrs. Estep was a patient of Dr. Perseff and told him about his ex-wife's words.

He filed a motion for contempt and Mrs. Perseff was hauled before the court. After a hearing, she was placed on three months' probation, fined $1,000 and ordered to perform 100 hours of community service. Mrs. Perseff denies she ever said anything bad about her former spouse.

How to stay younger as you grow older

Aging isn't automatic. Those bags and wrinkles, breakdowns and health problems can be delayed or avoided entirely, scientists say, just by taking proper care of yourself.

"Some things blamed on aging are not aging at all," cautions one expert, Dr. Carl Eisdorfer. "They are caused by smoking, drinking, lousy food habits and so on."

Other symptoms commonly associated with old age are the result of disease that can be minimized or prevented by living right, authorities say.

To put the least amount of wear and tear on your body, there are simple steps you can take through the years. Here they are, divided by age groups:

In your 20s

Start protecting your skin now to prevent aging later by using sun screens. Cut down on the hours you spend tanning. Protect your eyes from head injury. Turn down your radio, stay away from blaring speakers at discos and concerts.

Be sure to get regular dental checkups. Don't smoke and don't abuse drugs. Avoid casual sex — it can lead to infertility and disease. Use contraceptives.

Women should do regular breast examinations for lumps. If you don't know how to do it, order a pamphlet from the American Cancer Society. Get a regular Pap smear, too. If you get pregnant, avoid smoking and alcohol.

In your 30s

If you're a woman who's been on The Pill for years, this is a good time to talk with your doctor about switching to another form of contraception. It's also the decade to begin mammograms at about 35.

Men should examine their testicles monthly for lumps or enlargement. Testicular cancer can be cured easily if caught early. Start watching your weight now and begin a sensible, regular exercise program.

If you intend to exercise after a long period of inactivity, get a checkup before you begin. If you have a stressful life, set aside some time to relax every day.

In your 40s

By all means quit smoking if you haven't before. And since your body now requires fewer calories, cut down on your food intake, too. This is the time of early menopause and the mid-life crisis. Watch out for too much stress and get your blood pressure checked regularly.

Be sure to get plenty of rest. Get your eyes checked. You may need contact lenses or glasses. Get your hearing checked, see a dentist to check on gum disease and watch out for varicose veins.

In your 50s

Age is making your digestion more sluggish. Eat more fiber in the form of fresh vegetables, fruits and grains. Avoid laxatives and fatty foods.

For women, this is the decade of menopause.

Symptoms like hot flashes and painful intercourse can be treated in consultation with your doctor. Mammograms should now be taken annually. Be sure to get enough calcium — as much as 1,500 milligrams a day — after menopause. Don't consume too much alcohol and don't drink alone.

In your 60s

You may have to begin wearing a bearing aid now. About 90 percent of people over glasses at this age and 30 percent of the glasses are obsolete or incorrect prescriptions. Have regular eye checkups as your vision changes and watch for symptoms of cataracts or glaucoma. Have your cholesterol level tested.

Avoid boredom and depression. Stay active. Join a group to avoid loneliness and depression.

See a doctor if you develop these symptoms: persistent lumps, sores that don't heal, migraine headaches, dizziness, breathlessness, chest pain, leg pains when walking, lower back pain, frequent thirst or urination, ringing in the ears.

In your 70s

Don't overmedicate yourself. Don't ask your doctor for medications you don't need and don't hoard old medications. Protect your eyes from sunlight with optical quality sunglasses and reduce night driving. Remember to keep your eyes moving to get a complete picture of your surroundings as you drive.

Have your ears checked for impacted wax or other problems. Even if your live alone it's important to eat regularly and healthily. Get plenty of fluids and fresh vegetables in your diet.

Visit your dentist for a check of teeth or dentures, as tooth problems lead to malnutrition in many older people who can't chew.

Tend your feet and toenails, even if you have to go to a podiatrist.

Keep a pad by the phone to help your memory. Jot down important dates on the pad or a calendar. Prevent falls by checking your house for hazards.

In your 80s

You may want to consider the wisdom of driving at this age. Maybe you could keep your car, but ask a friend or relative to drive you. Or buy gas for friends in exchange for rides in their car.

If you feel depressed, don't keep it to yourself. Share your feelings with friends, relatives or your doctor.

Naps during the day can lead to sleeplessness at night. Stay socially active and try to find a hobby that will keep you interested and busy. Be especially careful to eat balanced meals. If you are unable to cook for yourself, there are several agencies that deliver meals to your door.

Man nearly has baby over county's blooper!

Marilyn Bain got the shock of her life when she was informed that her husband — who she thought was childless — owed $144 in back child support!

By SUSAN MARTIN

Marilyn's hubby Brian was even more shocked when he got a phone call from his ex-wife asking him what was going on. He finally convinced her it was all a mistake caused by a misunderstood letter sent by officials in Peoria, Ill.

"I thought maybe he had a kid I didn't know about," said Marilyn, 40, who's been wed to Brian for 18 years.

"It was really upsetting — it made my stomach turn. I called each at work and could tell by how he reacted that he was nervous."

The child-support screw-up affected about 2,000 residents of Peoria County.

In a letter from the County Administrator, residents were told there would be an extra fee "because making unnecessary or invalid support payments."

The letter was immediately sent to Brian, who had paid alimony to a former wife years before and for years received and had been cleared from the county's records.

"When you see something like that, legal-looking with a case number and all, it's quite intimidating," Marilyn said. The letter "It made her quite a church. I suggested officials to be apologetic about it, but they weren't."

A county spokesman said the fiasco was a misunderstanding

Evil Eddie Gilbert runs down rival Jerry Lawler with a speeding car!

JACK O'BRIEN

Former world wrestling champ Jerry "The King" Lawler was nearly bashed to death when his archenemy, evil Eddie Gilbert, intentionally ran him down with a speeding car!

"Eddie tried to kill Jerry, pure and simple," said a shocked bad-guy grappler who asked to remain anonymous.

I knew Eddie had hated Jerry's guts ever since Jerry had pinned him with a powerful, but I never dreamed the bald wrestler would go that far. Even in a world as twisted as ours, this is really sick.

Hours before the insane attack, Eddie and his longtime brother Doug had been suspended by the USWA ring commissioner for a vicious attack on fan favorite Robert Gibson.

The brothers beat Gibson in a bloody pulp before Lawler — the People's Champion — dashed into the ring to save the fallen wrestler from permanent injury.

Later, the Gilbert boys waited to ambush Lawler outside the Memphis Twin Arena. And when Jerry walked into the parking lot, Eddie sped down him in his car — sending him to the hospital with a concussion and severe cuts and bruises.

Doctors told the injured wrestler he'd need at least three months to recuperate. But Lawler says he can't wait that long to get his revenge against the berserk brothers.

I have asked the commissioner to lift the Gilberts' suspension so I can get my hands on them in the ring," Lawler told me. "I can do more damage that in the parking lot. I'm sure they did it on purpose with their car!

He tried to kill him, says ring insider

Fed-up dad replaces family with dummies

Dentist Thomas Bremann lost his wife and two kids last year when his spouse left him for another man. But he says he's happier than ever with his new family — three department store mannequins who don't give him any guff!

By BEATRICE DEXTER

Since he bought the female mannequins and two girl mannequins last fall the 44-year-old divorced dad claims his house is peaceful at last with no arguments, no history tests, and no waiting to use the bathroom. And he claims the mannequins are ideal company when he returns home from a hard day at work.

"My wife used to nag, nag, nag," said Dr Bremann, who admits he was lonely until he got his plastic family. "My kids used to quibble over the television, they used to fight over the phone, they used to leave, leave and leave each other!

"Just being around them made me tense and depressed. Now I have company but I've got no hassles. It's wonderful."

Dr Bremann's marriage came apart after his wife Gina fell in love with a neighbor. But it hadn't been a happy one for a long time. He says Gina was tense and demanding. She constantly complained Dr Bremann didn't earn enough money, he says.

She would sit around the house in her curlers and housedress, he says, and over the years she got lazy.

"I tried to please her, but nothing worked," Dr Bremann said. "And she was teaching my 8-year-old daughter and my 11-year-old daughter to be just like she was."

Dr Bremann's story came out when a local newspaper ran a three-part series on alternatives to the traditional family.

The Hanover, West Germany, pain specialist thinks that his bizarre mannequin family could work for others and provide welcome company for divorcees, widowers and other lonely folks.

Mrs Bremann refused to comment on her ex-husband's substitute family.

'Our [redacted] aren't ashamed to admit they have AIDS'

By CINDY O'NEIL

Ricky, Robert and Randy Ray were just three typical young brothers until 1986 when all three were diagnosed as AIDS victims.

Since the tragedy of AIDS struck their family the Rays have been through hell and back. But the boys, sister Candy and parents Clifford and Louise pulled together as a family and fought to continue their lives and educate others about the deadly disease.

The three handsome brothers are hemophiliacs and contracted the AIDS virus from tainted blood. When the boys were diagnosed the family not only faced the heartbreak of fatal illness, but the scorn of fearful neighbors as well. The town of Arcadia, Fla., shunned them. the school board banned the boys from classes and someone burned their home.

The harassed family shook away from the woods and moved to Sarasota, Fla. Warmly welcomed into their new town, the Rays began to pick up the pieces of their shattered lives.

"We almost lost track of who we really are," said dad Clifford Ray. "We got caught in the celebrity syndrome and we didn't want the kids to forget who they are."

And as they bravely forged ahead, "We try to create more living into the time," said mom Louise. "We don't wait until tomorrow to take a trip. We make the moments now."

The tragedy of AIDS touches its toll on the whole family. Sometimes sister Candy wishes that she had AIDS too. The healthy 9-year-old doesn't want to feel left out.

Victor, 13, Robert, 12, and Randy, 11, try to include their little sister. Candy is invited into the boys' private meetings to talk about AIDS.

"We mostly set up the meetings so we could spend time together," said Ricky. "Because we thought we were going to die."

The children's private meetings aren't permitted anymore. The boys are spending most of their time and school.

Ricky has written a book and hopes to publish it soon. He feels that his mission in life is to teach people about AIDS.

"My kids will tell the person next to them all the symptoms that they have AIDS," said Ray. "A lot of people in the country are ashamed to admit they have AIDS. Our kids aren't ashamed. It's nothing to be ashamed of."

The past few years have been hard on the Rays and it doesn't look like it will get easier soon.

"At this point, we think that the quality of life is more important than the quantity," Louise told The NEWS. "We realize that every day is real precious.

"Each day we have with our kids is borrowed time. We just live day by day."

BROTHERS Robert, Randy and Ricky Ray, left to right, are making them memories per.

Brave brothers live on borrowed time

WANTED poster distributed by Virginia state agency

State tracks down deadbeat daddies

Virginia puts their pictures on wanted posters

The state of Virginia is tracking down deadbeat dads by putting them on its "10 Most Wanted List."

The state's Division of Child Support Enforcement makes up wanted posters with personal information and pictures of the delinquent dads and distributes them to newspapers and law enforcement agencies.

By MARTINA ATKINS

Since the program was started on August 10th, officials have nabbed 11 of the 17 men listed on two previous "most wanted" lists and a list featured a third list.

"The response has just been fantastic," said Peter Bernardo, a spokesman for the agency. "For the most part we'd given up hope of ever finding any of these men. We're hoping to have the same luck with this latest list as we did with the previous ones."

The offenders on the current list were selected from about 10,000 people who owe back support, by wives, former wives and local child support officials.

"They don't necessarily owe the most," said Bernardo, "but they've gone to a great deal of trouble to avoid paying."

Topping the list of most-wanted dads is Anthony Eugene Ray, a geologist who officials say owes more than $70,000.

Robert Montcastle Flannery, a hairdresser, is second on the list. Officials say he owes $61,450

Attack of the killer mold

A deadly mold is running rampant in the Soviet city of Tashkent, attacking humans and eating through concrete.

Two subway stations in the Central Asian city have been closed and sealed off during a year-long investigation into illnesses reported by train workers and passengers.

The new species of mold has been found in the blood of four patients who worked at Tashkent's Chilanz station, said Professor N. Dzhalal-Khadzhayeva

Man shoots boss over annual bonus — then kills himself!

An angry salesman seethed silently for weeks because he didn't think his annual bonus was big enough — and then he shot his boss and blew his own brains out.

By JACK ALEXANDER

"Obviously, the amount of the bonus had been nagging him for two or three weeks, but he showed no signs of becoming violent," said Police Lt. John Graham.

But the rage that rankled in mild-mannered Craig Pettinichi boiled over when he walked into the office of Radio Shack sales manager Edward Drechsler Sr. in Yorktown, N.Y.

Pettinichi, 36, handed his boss a note which said, "Don't — — — with my bonus." Then he dipped a shirt through the hole made by Drechsler in the fluorescent.

Drechsler was clutching his blood-smeared face as Pettinichi put the 38-caliber pistol in his own mouth and pulled the trigger.

"I've been shot all over the face. My face is permanently disfigured," Drechsler, who was hospitalized in fair condition, told police.

He wanted $1,000 more than he got, say cops

Pettinichi, who had worked five years for Radio Shack without any problems, died instantly.

The "bonus thing was no big deal," said Lt. Graham. "It was about $1,000 less than he expected." Police said Pettinichi left no suicide note, but had left a neatly printed list of names and addresses of his relatives and close friends on Drechsler's desk.

POLICE in Catonia, N.Y., remove Craig Pettinichi's body.

Dogs have a leash on their owners

Dogs really are a man's best friend. More than 33 percent of all dog owners say they're as attached to their pooches as they are to their spouses or kids.

Other astonishing facts discovered about the furry friends in a recent survey of 1,000 dog owners revealed:

- 33 percent of pooch owners use their pets as much as their best friends.
- 63 percent say cuteness and cuddliness is what makes a dog special.
- 11% percent said their mutt sleeps anywhere he wants.
- Half of the dog owners admit their pet can't do a single trick.

THE WORK OF THE DEVIL?

Old-timers swear they saw the hand of Satan twist this steeple

The majestic old steeple stood straight and tall atop St. Thomas church for hundreds of years until the spine-chilling afternoon Satan came to town — and twisted the 55-ton tower like a licorice stick.

"My grandfather saw it with his own eyes and he said it was the most terrifying thing that ever happened to him," said pensioner Peter Smith. "It was a moment of hell on Earth, that's what he told me."

Officially, church bigwigs wrinkle their noses at the legend of Satan and the spire.

But scores of God-fearing oldsters in Chesterfield, England, swear it's the gospel truth.

"It was more than a hundred years ago and Grandad was a young man," said Smith, 71. "He was walking over there by the church, headed home, when a tremendous whirlwind began blowing around the steeple. There was a howling, like a hurricane, and while a crowd of people watched, the Devil appeared right in the middle of that squall. He was the ugliest thing any of them had ever seen — half man and half beast.

"He had a man's body and a goat's head, with horns, and black eyes as shiny as coals.

"And as the wind blew around the steeple, that tower began to creak and groan like it was being wrenched right off the top of the church.

"Then the big blow died down and Lucifer was gone and that old spire, with all that lead in it, was twisted around like it was nothing."

But even the legend's most fanatical believers can't explain why the Devil chose to perform his grotesque handiwork on St. Thomas church, a church built in the early 1800s.

"My Grandmum saw the whole thing, too, and she said the thought maybe he just messed and didn't mean to do any harm," said Eleanor Waters, 83.

"But me, I think he meant it. I think he was just being sneaky."

Daughter sells couple's furniture — while they are away on vacation!

Gene and Carolyn Caylor went away on vacation and came back to an empty house — after their daughter auctioned off everything they owned for a few hundred dollars! But the Bettendorf, Iowa, couple say 26-year-old Kimberly Caylor did leave a few things behind: Her two kids, aged 4 and 15 months!

By SUSAN HANSON

"We haven't got a clue as to why she did it," said shocked Gene Caylor, a meat packing plant supervisor. "She was living with us and working part-time. She had no problems that we knew of. We got most of our things back, but we're still pressing charges. She was paid just $600 for over $5,000 worth of stuff."

According to police, Kimberly sent her 4-year-old off on a short vacation with the Caylors while she stayed home in Bettendorf with her baby. On the day her parents left, Kimberly began calling auction houses until she found one that would buy the Caylors' furnishings, police say.

The next day she dropped her baby off at a sitter's house and went back to her parents to supervise the loading of all their possessions into an auction company's truck, according to police. Then she took the money and ran, they say.

"The Caylors' other daughter drove by and saw everything out in the front yard," said Det. Rick Dreger of the Bettendorf Police Department. "She called her parents at their vacation home in Wisconsin. Kimberly left a note in her mom and dad that said, 'Have no choice. I was in trouble. If you don't say it was me, you can collect on insurance. Love, Kim.'"

Cupid's love life was a write-off too

A budding young romeo not only couldn't make a go of his romantic letter-writing business — but got dumped by his girlfriend, too.

Mike Hulse figured he was on to a winner when he started writing love letters for lonely guys who were too shy to write to their sweethearts themselves.

But he closed down his business after two weeks and only one customer.

That was the day his girlfriend gave him the boot. The 19-year-old student from Wednesbury, England, wrote her a letter.

She didn't even reply.

The most incredible photo you'll ever see!

THIS WOMAN SURVIVED 10,000 VOLTS!

A 22-year-old woman miraculously survived a trip to the electric chair and we've got the pictures to prove it!

By CHRISTIAN STEELE

The dramatic photos clearly show Helen Hir crying before her scheduled execution and clawing the arms of the electric chair after an official turned on the juice.

Journalist Richard Stinson posed as a priest and smuggled a camera into the prison to get the pictures. He actually heard the woman scream, "Let me go. Don't do it again," after she survived three 10,000-volt surges in the chair.

"They hit her with everything they had and still couldn't kill her," said Stinson. "Prison officials were terrified themselves and after a brief discussion, they walked her to the prison infirmary.

"Her head, wrists and legs were badly burned and she obviously suffered some brain and nerve damage because her speech was slurred and she was trembling all over.

"The authorities aren't talking. But sources tell me that officials consider the woman's survival to be an act of God and will probably release her."

The chances of Stinson getting inside the Singapore prison to take pictures — much less photograph the first electric chair survivor in history — are almost beyond comprehension.

But his luck was rewarded by months of legwork in which he gained the confidence of prison workers who helped him get the photos without being detected.

"I took a personal interest in the Hir case during her trial for drug smuggling because I was convinced that she had been framed," said Stinson.

"She received a 30-year sentence but I suspected that she had been taken to one of Singapore's notorious 'penal centers' where illegal executions are carried out. I wanted to document and expose what had been going on in these secret prisons. As it turned out she didn't die and I got the story and pictures.

"It couldn't have turned out better for either of us."

Singapore officials angrily deny the reporter's allegations and say that illegal executions "never are and will never take place" on the island — a former British colony where English is widely spoken.

Regardless of the denial, Stinson's pictures prove that there has been at least one unwilling

DOOMED woman in tense moments before she was strapped into electric chair.

ACTUAL MOMENT when the switch was thrown. Woman's fingers claw at the arms of the chair as 10,000 volts coursed through her body
